Lindsey Wilson

Lindsey Wilson is an NYC singer-songwriter with a flair for nostalgia with her memorable mix of 70's style urban folk rock and conscious lyrics. Throughout her musical career, Lindsey has embraced issues of heart and mind in her original music. Love songs, protest tunes and lyrics of empowerment have all been a true representation of her style and sensibilities. Her songs "Stand for the People" and "The People Shall Rise" have caught the attention of diverse audiences across the country. Lindsey's influences stem from a myriad of musically conscious voices such as Odetta, Richie Havens, Joni Mitchell, and Joan Armatrading. However, Lindsey's message is truly her own. ### Vincent Cross

Vincent Cross is a rustic folk troubadour rooted in Ireland and Australia, now based in New York City. Inspired by 60s icons like Seeger and Dylan, he blends poetic songwriting with folk tradition. His album Old Songs For Modern Folk reached #2 on the Folk DJ Chart, while The Life & Times of James "The Rooster" Corcoran drew critical praise. His essay "Writing the Songs of our Ancestors" appeared in Voices: The Journal of New York Folklore. His fifth album, A Place Where Songs Come to Live arrived in June and features an International Acoustic Music Awards finalist "In the Eyes of My Father." ### Mike Lee

Mike Lee grew up in the northern prairie of South Dakota and now calls Queens home. He sings the blues with a grin, exploring why we laugh through hard times and why life's highlights can bring a tear to our eyes. After releasing his debut solo effort, Pick Me Up Café, Mike founded the roots-rock band Goatroper with his partner Abbey Janii – "words you can dance to." You can find the two of them cutting a rug in a Brooklyn honky-tonk just as soon as singing a sweet tune around a fire in the north woods. Rod MacDonald
with Marc Dann

Rod MacDonald was born in Connecticut and began singing professionally in New York City, where he became a leading headliner in Greenwich Village clubs in the 1980s. He recorded 21 songs for Fast Folk magazine, including "American Jerusalem," "A Sailor's Prayer," "Every Living Thing," and "White Buffalo," also recorded by numerous other artists. He has 14 solo CDs, most recently Rants and Romance. The last four have made the top ten nationally on folk radio charts. Rod has also recorded three CDs with the Palm Beach County band Big Brass Bed, which New Times named "Best Folk Band" in 2016. Now living in south Florida, Rod has been named to the "Ten Greatest South Florida Folksingers Of All Time" list by New Times, and one of "Ten Magnificent Musicians of Palm Beach County" by The Palm Beach Post. He is also Music Americana instructor with Osher Lifelong Learning at Florida Atlantic University and was named Distinguished Faculty Member in 2012. His third novel, Election Night, has just been published. rodmacdonald.com

Special Guest Lisa Klotz

Lisa is a singer/songwriter whose style is a combination of folk, blues and gospel held together by a powerful and resonant voice. Both her original and cover songs touch upon themes of environmental and social justice, family, conflict resolution and spirituality. Lisa's first CD, Morning Sun, was released last year and reached #32 on folk radio charts. She will be joined tonight by Annie Loney and Mark Dann. lisaklotz.com
